Religious Stained Glass as a Motivational Tool

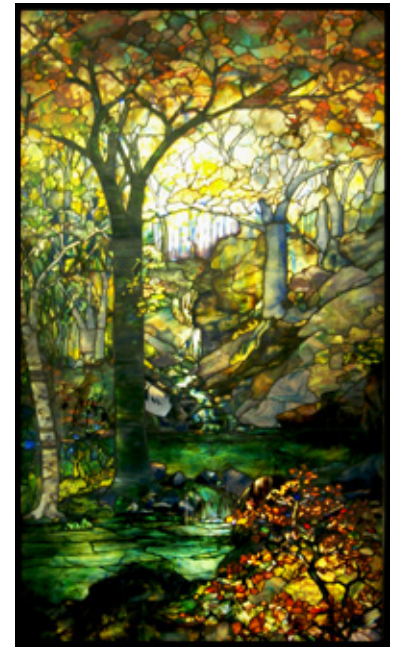

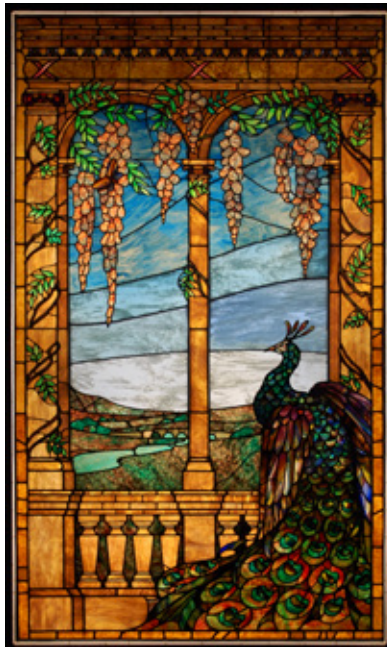

Stained glass is a very distinctive and stimulating way to add color and splendor to any place. Even the most boring room can be transformed by stained glass pictures. People have been using stained glass pictures to decorate for centuries. Stained glass pictures were first used in the Gothic cathedrals of the medieval times to add color and splendor and to inspire and motivate congregations. These pictorial images reminded illiterate churchgoers of the stories of the Bible. Stained glass pictures worked for these medieval people as picture books do for children; they told a story without words.

Stained glass pictures are still used for similar purposes today. These stained glass pictures stand tall and beautiful in hundreds of churches and cathedrals around the world. Though most Christians today can read, these stained glass pictures still do a stunning job of illustrating the Bible. Inspiration and motivation is often found in beautiful stained glass pictures.

Aesthetically Pleasing Non-religious Stained Glass

Once stained glass became a well-known art form, more and more stained glass artists began to make stained glass pictures purely for the decorative aspect. Stained glass has been proven to relax a person and provide subtle mood alterations. Stained glass pictures make a wonderful addition to homes and offices; they provide color and a unique decorative appeal. Stained glass pictures can totally change the ambiance of a room, beautifully filtering light and lifting people's spirits.
